

Job Listing Resources

If you're new to the job market, you may not know where to begin looking for job listings. Here are some ideas to get you started.

There are some very large and popular job-search websites that should be basic to your search. Be sure to create a profile and upload your own resume as well as searching the listings, so that hiring managers and recruiters can find you. Some examples:

- Indeed: <https://www.indeed.com/>
- LinkedIn: <https://www.linkedin.com/>
- Glassdoor: <https://www.glassdoor.co.in/index.htm>
- Monster: <https://www.monster.com/>

Many of the major websites above have country-specific versions that may be helpful if you are not in the United States. Also, some sites are geared toward a worldwide search. Some examples:

- Indeed Canada: <https://ca.indeed.com/>
- CareerJet: <https://www.careerjet.com/>

Additionally, countries other than the United States have their own popular websites. Some examples:

- Naukri (India): <https://www.naukri.com/>
- Shine (India): <https://www.shine.com/>
- JobsDB (East Asia): <https://www.jobsdb.com/>
- TotalJobs (United Kingdom): <https://recruiting.totaljobs.com/home>

- SEEK (Australia): <https://www.seek.com.au/>

There are also websites that focus on jobs in a particular field, which can definitely narrow your search. Some examples:

- Datajobs (data-related careers): <https://datajobs.com/>
- Outer Join (data-related remote work): <https://outerjoin.us/>
- AI Jobs (jobs in machine learning and AI): <https://ai-jobs.net/>

If you aspire to work for specific companies, check their websites for job listing pages. Most larger companies, and many smaller ones, maintain pages with open positions in their organizations. This is also true of other types of organizations, such as universities or medical centers. Some examples:

- Microsoft: <https://careers.microsoft.com/us/en>
- Google: <https://careers.google.com/>
- University of California at Los Angeles: <https://www.ucla.edu/careers>
- Fred Hutchinson Cancer Center: <https://www.fredhutch.org/en/about/careers.html>

Don't forget to check local resources as well. In the United States, this includes state employment offices that frequently offer their own job listings, as well as many other resources for job seekers. Additionally, there are usually listings for the government and military if that fits your plans.